The survey counted forty species on the island[1] and found nesting sites for twelve of them.

Most of the nests were on the western cliffs, where the ground is hardest to reach.[2]

[1] Counted over three summers, from 2019 to 2021.

[2] The eastern shore is open to grazing.